

In music, a coda comes at the end of a piece of music, summing up the preceding themes and brings the piece to a satisfactory close.

In life, Coda Alliance is a community-based, not-for-profit organization with similar purpose, helping individuals and their families plan and:

- Coda Alliance promotes advance discussion of end-of-life care with families and healthcare providers.
- Coda is working to help community members learn about end-of-life options and discuss their values and goals with their family and healthcare providers prior to the onset of serious illness.
- Coda fosters collaboration among community groups, healthcare providers and healthcare institutions to overcome barriers to superb end-of-life care for community members.

Documented Need for End of Life Conversations and Resources

Aug 30, 2014, Pam Belluck, New York Times

“...evidence suggests that discussions can make a difference. One study found that Cancer patients who previously discussed end-of-life preferences with doctors more often received care matching those wishes. Other studies suggest planning lowers stress in patients and families.”

And reimbursement for having the conversation “...private insurers have begun reimbursing doctors for these “advance care planning conversations.” “Some states recently began covering sessions for Medicaid patients.”
